1. An old building which serves as a signal station is located on the island of Murter just a little south of the parallel crossing the Kamieac reef, on the highest mountain which stretches along the western coast. Immediately below the mountain top, the western slopes of this mountain are like a rocky almost vertical wall. The openings of two caves which are fortified by a thick layer of reinforced concrete are to be found on this wall. The two openings are slightly turned to the north.
2. Immediately underneath the two caverns and at an equal distance from the cave openings is a bunker of reinforced concrete which appears to be an observation point. Both the caverns and the bunker appear to be unarmed.
